

one of his lady friends. He is neither within sight nor hearing so I suppose he is out comforting the girl over the failure to place for a prize.

"Eh? Let's see—that's alright there, but you need a comma after that word."

It's just a freshman looking for help on one of those infernal themes they are required to write every week for Rhet. By the way, Phi Kappa was fortunate this year in pledging eighteen men who, we believe, will do big things for Alpha Chi Rho at Illinois. Postulants Jackson and Leesley are out for track, Postulant Peffers is supplying those ingenious trumpet breaks for a campus orchestra, and a number of other freshmen are cogs in the University 350-piece band.

As always, Phi Kappa is keeping up its name in publication work. Brother Symons is providing the military department with publicity and keeping his eye on the election of junior news editors for The Daily Illini next spring. Postulant O'Connel is reading proof for the paper.

Brother Casey Ireland has just stopped here in front of the fire. He's been running through the halls clad only and lightly in his checked pajamas trying to keep the underclassmen at the books. And here come Brothers McKee and "Poop-poop-ah-doop" Wick (the Brothers at Ohio will remember him from last year). They are arguing as usual over the merits of a couple of prospective dates.

It looks as if it were going to be a regular midnight confab for Brother Sholis, chief news editor on The Daily Illini, and Brother Lantz, junior news editor, have arrived and for once are not deliberately planning a publicity campaign for the Illinois Union.

"Study rules."

That authoritative yell came suspiciously from the direction of Brother Morse's room—and it was only a few nights ago that his roommate, Postulant O'Connell, kept everyone excited by the faint murmur of a radio established in the room.

Brother Huenergardt spent Saturday with the reserve football team defeating the Indiana second string and helping alleviate the sting of defeat at home. Otto has been plugging away earnestly and should get his chance in one of the Big Ten games this fall. Postulants Rothgeb, Bingamon, and Mongreig are working with the freshman football team and Postulant Brown is learning the ups and downs of wrestling with the freshman squad.

Brother Marshall, social and dance chairman, reports that when the Ohio Brothers come over November 22 with their football team on which the Illini will practice there will be a big time for all at Phi Kappa. One of the best campus orchestras has been secured for the event and Brother Marshall and his yes-men are conspiring to make it eclipse even the Phi Kappa welcome from Ohio last year.
