

in laundry costs and operating supplies makes it necessary for Illinois to adjust its rates.

Frederick Benjamin Stiven, 64, director of the school of music, died on January 21 in McKinley hospital. He had been suffering from a chronic illness since last fall.

Some possibility that the long discussed university sports palace might be included in requests for reappropriation of funds not used in the 1945-47 biennium, has been indicated by President George D. Stoddard.

The Illinois State Senate has requested the university trustees to consider "reasonable and equitable" tuition rate increases to meet a portion of the school's higher operating costs.
