

During the past few weeks, many of the Brothers have been working on a new House project. It seems the Mothers and Dads decided we needed the ping-pong room renovated. Under the watchful eye of Larry Higgins, '53, the room is gradually changing into a glorified rat-race room complete with wall panelling, booths and a milk bar. This should be the most popular place in the House during coke-dates and exchanges. The Dads thought we should call it "The Den," and the Mothers (bless their hearts) decided "Rumpus room" would be appropriate. These fine suggestions were considered (naturally), but when the room is christened, it will be dubbed "The Crow's Nest."

Fragile KyRo is scratching at the front door now—must let him in before he pulls it off the hinges. Best wishes for the summer from all the Brothers.

TED KJELLSTROM