roduced him to Eleanor, his current wife.

The Schooleys are still sitting in a pew together every Sunday at the Rancho Bernardo Community Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Schooley is now retired, too, from her job as director of menu planning for the Marriott Corporation.

Hersch Schooley is a regular member of the Rancho Bernardo Kiwanis Club and its oldest member in terms of years, not thought. Rancho Bernardo is a suburb of San Diego.

How would Schooley handle a delicate image problem like that of the Secretary of the Interior James Watt? "I might turn in my suit," Hersch laughed. To the obligatory question one must always ask of someone who has remained healthy and wise to a considerable age, "What advice would you give others?" without hesitation and with the conciseness of a good reporter, Schooley replied, "Stay loose." ¶

Ed note: This piece first appeared in the Bernardo News, Rancho Bernardo, CA, and was written by Mrs. Ann Jolley. Cunning worked with Hersch to get additional facts and with them augmented and edited the story and pictures.
